Outreach efforts compromised by threat to Public Access TV

TALLAHASSEE—As Atheists of Florida continues its sixth year of production of the Atheist Forum in Hillsborough County, a bill signed in to state law this month by Gov. Charlie Crist threatens the very survival of Public Access channels in the state.

Ironically dubbed the “Consumer Choice Act of 2007,” it is anything but. The truth is that the bill is not consumer friendly and will not produce lower rates. Along with removing local controls over rights of way, HB529 negatively impacts local government revenues and ability to monitor service, requires complaints to go to the Department of Agriculture instead of locals, permits discontinuation of cable service to some residents, does not guarantee service to all residents and marks the beginning of the end of PEG [Public, Education and Government] access cable TV channels and, with that, free speech on the cable-waves in the State of Florida. The bill allows cable and video service providers, rather than a community, to decide the future of existing public, educational and governmental access channels. Existing channels will be subject to utilization criteria the industry intends to use as excuses to eliminate availability of existing public, educational and government access channels.

Even worse, public access channels would be severely restricted and local governments would have to find some way to pay for televising their meetings. Currently this public-affairs programming is paid for by cable subscribers, but after 2012 the companies wouldn't be required to provide government access.

The governor did release a statement indicating that he remains concerned about public access TV and wants to protect it.

Freshman Senator Ronda Storms inserted a provision alleging that public access channels are actually unconstitutional. It was the most tactful way she could conceive to legislate that any criticism on her should be unconstitutional. Her amendment also attempted to eliminate any future channels in communities that presently do not have them and limits PEG channels to only two channels instead of three.

In Hillsborough County, Public Access should continue to serve us through at least the year 2012 because the law allowed that present PEG channels could remain in place as long as current local franchise agreements had been established. We should all be writing the governor asking what his intentions are with respect to the survival of this remarkable medium of public expression so voraciously demonized by Storms and despised by the profit-focused providers.

Continuing commitment

At every annual meeting, the board of directors votes to sponsor a camper at Camp Quest. Although we've been rather sporadic about doing so at times, this year it gives us great pleasure to be sponsoring the child of one of our own members.

Sheridan Scott, the 9-year-old son of member Julia Scott, will be off to camp this summer for the ten day excursion at the original Camp Quest in Ohio. His entire $550 registration fee has been covered by Atheists of Florida. You can learn more about this remarkable camp and its critical thinking approach to camping at their Web site, www.camp-quest.com.

Have a great experience, Scott. Don't forget to write.

Chapter Meetings

In past years, the Tampa Bay Chapter was able to book meeting space in local libraries for an entire year at a time. With the spaces becoming increasingly popular, the libraries have limited the advanced bookings to three months. Consequently, we are not always able to secure the meeting spaces we want and need to find alternative meeting places.

It is very important, therefore, that those who plan to attend any of our meetings verify the locations each month. The best way to accomplish this is to be certain you have your e-mail address in the local database. Then each month, approximately one week prior to the meeting, you will receive an e-mail confirmation of the meeting location, time, and agenda. We never share or sell our database with any other organization, so if you send us your e-dress, you may be assured it will go no further than our database.

Those lacking e-mail access may call the Atheists of Florida phone line at (813) 835-1500 or call Chairman Ed Golly direct at (813) 839-7567. We are always committed to holding the meetings on the second Sunday of each month.

Atheist Alliance Convention

Changes within the Alliance are not limited to the presidency of Margaret Downey. The annual convention was not held during the Easter weekend this year, but has been moved to the fall of each year (see page 6 for specifics). We hope to have a large contingency from Florida in attendance this year, and will provide registration forms in upcoming newsletters. They are also available at the Atheist Alliance Web site—www.AtheistAlliance.org.

In the 1600 and 1700's a debate was raging on spontaneous generation. It was accepted that all manner of living things were spontaneously generated by God or nature. Toads, flies, fleas, and other creatures seemed to appear without having parents.

In 1668, Francesco Redi did an experi-

No. 36—Intelligent Design and the Vegetative Force

— Jim Strayer

ment covering some jars containing meat with cloth and leaving others uncovered. It proved that flies lay eggs on meat and that flies do not arise spontaneously. This was an amazing experiment for the time. Very few experiments were done by the scientist of that period. Astronomers made observations, mathematicians did calculation, physicists measured physical properties, and chemists searched for new elements, but experimentation was rare. One hundred years earlier Antonie van Leeuwenhoek had proven that fleas had parents, but it meant little to the people who called them selves scientists because they did not deal with living things. That was God's domain.

In 1778 when a priest, Father Lazzarno Spallanzani, showed by a brilliant experiment that microbes do not arise spontaneously he was challenged by another priest, Father John Needham. Needham did some experiments that he thought showed that the "wee beasties" do arise by spontaneous generation. He showed these experiments to Count Buffon from the Royal Society of London. He and the Royal Society members were convinced that Needham was right.

When Needham and Buffon were asked why Spallanzani's experiments were wrong they explained that he had destroyed the "vegetative force" by heating the mutton gravy in a closed flask. (Mutton gravy was a favorite substance for spontaneous generation).

The vegetative force explained many things to both the religious and nonbelievers. The religious said it was a tool which God uses to accomplish his will and the non believers said that if there is a vegetative force there is no need for a God. The non believers were quickly discredited when it was explained that the "vegetative force" was a tool, used by God, that turned Adam's rib in to Eve. There was no way to argue against such an overwhelming example of the vegetative force.

One hundred years later most of the scientific community still accepted God's wonderful tool. Then in 1861 Louis Pasteur repeated Spallanzani experiment only to be told that he had not proven that the vegetative force did not exist.

Pasteur was a different kind of scientist. He improved on Spallanzani experiment by heating the mutton gravy in a flask with a swan neck so that dust could not enter, but air could move freely. Even though the air could get to the gravy no microbes were spontaneously generated, until dust was introduced. Dust carries microbes, they are not created by God.

Why is this important? It is because intelligent design is the same idea as the vegetative force.

Very quickly the religious discarded the vegetative force for a master designer. The "if there is a watch there must be a watch maker" idea came up about the same time as the vegetative force was discarded.

Needham had taught the God believers something. That is, don't do experiments to prove the supernatural. They learned that the existence of God must be established by a force out side of the universe that cannot be tested.

What a great scheme. God is out side of the universe, but is able to use his great intelligence to work miracles inside of the universe.

When I was a boy my father told me that if people will believe in Christianity, they would believe anything. People believed in the vegetative force for over 200 years. I am sure they will believe in intelligent design even longer.

Why is this important?
It is because intelligent design is the same idea as the vegetative force. Very quickly the religious discarded the vegetative force for a master designer!

I was embroiled in online forum debates, with Christians on the topic of child and sexual abuse for a period of almost two months during the winter of 2006.

This three-part series is a summary of some of the arguments and research references that I used to support my position and counter-arguments. The cited reference links are not click-able in PDF to be able to navigate to the supporting articles, you'll have to re-key them in your web browser, but they are all valid links. claims, e.g., ACLU endorses NAMBLA (a blatant lie). ACLU merely endorses NAMBLA'S right to free speech when in fact, the official ACLU position is that it does not agree with NAMBLA ideology or its political agenda (<http://www.aclu.org/freespeech/protest/11289prs20000831.html>).

For the record, as a parent, I abhor what NAMBLA stands for, but at least one knows what to expect from them; unlike various (albeit not all) religious organizations and their representatives that hypocritically assume a moral high ground that they can never seem to attain. NAMBLA does pose a threat to young boys, but that threat pales in comparison to the long-standing shenanigans of institutionalized religion. Religion has been around far longer, the abusers (hiding behind the veneer of probity and righteousness) target pre-pubescent / post-pubescent boys AND girls. Religious institutions often harbor and protect abusers until legal and political pressures are so great that they are forced to take corrective action.

Wolves in the fold: Sexual abuse by religious authorities, Part 1 of 3 — Michael Harvey

Above the law, beyond the pale, beneath contempt

My consistent proposition has been that religious institutions and environments are fertile soil in which to sow the seeds of child and sexual abuse for two general reasons:

- ◆ Society accords preferred status to religion and its adherents, resulting in taboos on questioning faith/beliefs which discourages open dialog on its value and dangers
- ◆ Religious institutions tend to be authoritarian and absolutist; punitively discouraging open dialog on beliefs, practices, and administration policies; bitterly rejecting outside authority; attacking or stonewalling critics and reformers.

These two characteristics (common to most religions) synergistically create a socio-political vacuum that can foment an above-the-law mentality in religious institutions. Furthermore, a lack of consistent and strident external and internal accountability pressures reinforces a closed orthodoxy, rendering such organizations relatively impervious to naturally shifting paradigms of change and adaptation to evolving social conditions. In spite of overwhelming historical evidence and data, my arguments were ignored or blithely dismissed as absurd, religion bashing, or generalizing.

A recurring argument in opposition to mine was that NAMBLA (North American Man/Boy Love Association) is a grave threat to the safety of children and that the gay community should speak out against NAMBLA. In fact, laws and sanctions politically emasculated the organization long ago (<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/NAMBLA> - see sections on Ostracism and the 1990's). Gay Christians in the discussion forums pointed out that NAMBLA was/is considered a lunatic fringe within the gay community and is largely considered persona non grata; this obvious truth has yet to be accepted by Fundamentalist and Evangelical Christians who see bogeymen every place except where they really exist, usually right under their noses.

Nevertheless, my opponents continually raised the NAMBLA straw-man; or, conflated homosexuality with pedophilia; or, accused anyone who disagreed as supporting pedophilia; or, posted other non sequitur

The least among us

The "official position" of religious organizations is to protect children, and to punish / rehabilitate errant members of the clergy; however, there is clearly a serious disconnect between policy and practice.

Religious organizations demonstrably have been and continue to be, a far greater threat to the emotional and sexual health of children. The compilation of articles I shall cite is about sexual and child abuse within, related to, or centered round religious organizations; the abusers are mostly from the clergy but can also be volunteers, teachers, and other employees. The sources of these supporting articles are: news agencies; University studies/papers; other scholarly organizations; activist websites; and even journals from religions organizations.

The stark depth and breadth of the abuses are more profound when one considers that these abuses are not isolated (to geography, belief system, sect, diocese, parish, the neighborhood church on the corner) but encompass numerous religious organizations from round the globe. The evidence spans mostly a 50 year period, but stretches back to the beginnings of organized religion itself. The list of articles I cite is but a representative sampling of what we do know; the ugly implications are the same in each piece. I simply could not cite every article because there were just too many of them.

The healthy intellect must ask itself: "If, as religionists claim, we need religion, faith, and prayer for morals and ethical guidance, then why are the torchbearers of faith, the very ones who seem to be most prone to 'moral lapses'?" Keep that question in the forefront of your minds while perusing the evidence I present throughout this series. Although by my reckoning, worshipping other gods, making graven images, or working on a Sabbath seems to be of far greater concern to the gods, then the safety of innocents or the least among us.

In the next two installments, I shall cite numerous references and notes to support my proposition, and wrap-up with some modest proposals to address this ongoing travesty of justice.—MRH

"If, as religionists claim, we need religion, faith, and prayer for morals and ethical guidance, then why are the torchbearers of faith, the very ones who seem to be most prone to 'moral lapses'?"

Bible gets "XXX" rating in Hong Kong?

Sexy scriptures offend Asians

HONG KONG, AFP—The cosmopolitan jewel of the orient, where east meets west, has a problem, an indecency problem. A debate rages in this ancient city of modern capitalism over the morals of Hong Kong and obscenity complaints about the Bible.

The Television and Entertainments Licensing Authority (TELA), which oversees the publishing industry, has received 208 complaints that text within the Bible is indecent. "I can confirm that the complaints were received" and "The thrust of the complaints was that the Bible was obscene, that different parts of the Bible were offensive to readers." said a TELA spokeswoman.

TELA refused to divulge details of the complaints, but local media reported that they referred to acts of violence, rape and cannibalism reputedly contained in the Old and New Testaments. Reports speculated that the sudden flurry of messages sent to TELA was sparked by a Chinese-language website www.truthbible.com, which had exhorted readers to pressure TELA to reclassify the Bible as an indecent publication.

Could this be a godless Communist conspiracy? Perhaps, but what is more likely, is that this media melee is over an indecent classification of a sex survey in a student journal on the ever-dicey topics of bestiality and incest.

The Obscene Articles Tribunal (which sounds like a bureau title right out of Stalin's Soviet Union) issued the ruling on Chinese University publication CU Student Press, sparking angry calls from students that authorities were eroding freedom of speech.

Pedophile priest has memory problems

He cannot remember to stop molesting kids.

TUSCON, AZ—A onetime Tucson priest who was indicted last year on charges of molesting two boys in the 1980s has been indicted on similar charges involving another boy.

The Rev. Gary Edward Underwood, 53, a military priest in Bossier City, LA., was indicted by a Pima County grand jury April 24 on one count each of molestation of a child and sexual conduct with a minor under 15, allegedly occurring between Aug. 1, 1985, and Jan. 31, 1986.

Father Underwood, in addition to suffering from selective memory loss, also seems to be follow the moral dictates of his own belief system.

In November 2006, Underwood was indicted by a grand jury on one count of child molestation and two counts of sexual misconduct with a minor under 15, from March 21, 1983, through March 21, 1984, and six counts of molestation of a child and one count of sexual conduct with a minor under 15 from Oct. 8, 1983, through Oct. 8, 1984. Old habits are hard to break, prayer notwithstanding.

The Roman Catholic Diocese of Tucson is not paying for Underwood's defense, probably because they've already paid out 22.3 million dollars to more than 50 victims in 2005 alone.

Underwood, who posted bond in the earlier cases, pleaded not guilty to all charges and remains free on bond, court records show. Hopefully, Underwood will regain his lost moral memory.

Virgin births are possible

Amongst sharks, at least

HENRY DOORLY ZOO, NEBRASKA—Virgin births are possible in female sharks, according to a study that found a captive female bonnet-head shark had reproduced without having been near a male in three years. Other captive females, including a white spotted bamboo shark, have accomplished the same feat. Researchers conclude it is likely that all shark species can do so.

DNA analysis provided the evidence. "It was a big surprise for us," says zoo director Dr Lee Simmons. "We brought in three female bonnet-heads on 15 December 1998, and on 14 December 2001, bang! One of them gave birth to a 20 centimeter long offspring." The pup unfortunately died the same day from internal injuries caused by a stingray in the exhibit that munched the wiry infant then spat it out.

Simmons put the offspring on ice and gave it to the Guy Harvey Research Institute at Nova Southeastern University; he considered all possibilities including a delayed pregnancy, which is possible in some insects that can store sperm and then give birth later.

Dr. Mahmood Shivji, director of the institute collected tissue samples from all of the zoo's female bonnet-heads. DNA analysis, which took several years, identified one female as the mother. Research on the perished pup found that it had no paternal DNA. It also had half of its mother's genetic diversity.

The data indicates the mother gave birth via a non-sexual mode of reproduction known as automatic parthenogenesis. involves the female creating an egg that contains 50% of the mother's genes. It is induced to behave as though it has been fertilized by a tiny, genetically similar cell called a sister polar body.

Resulting offspring are doubly genetically disadvantaged: no father to provide genetic diversity; and lacks the mother's full genetic make-up. Such births can only occur when females do not have access to males, as in captivity, or in the wild when over-fishing depletes shark populations.

Data indicates the mother gave birth via a non-sexual mode of reproduction known as automatic parthenogenesis

A memo from Atheists of Florida Founder...

To: Atheists of Florida Board Members, and the newsletter Editor.
Date: Tuesday, April 10, 2007
From: Christos Tzanetakos

After the February board meeting, it became clear that Atheists of Florida with the acquiescence and support of Ed Golly and the majority of the current board members has adopted Jim Young's policy for incessant discussions and debates on the absurdities of religious books,

(in particular the bible) and therefore, changed the course of the organization of promoting the philosophy of atheism and supporting the state-church separation. This has been manifested by the TV programs that in my opinion are unprofessional and most probably are a turn-off for any prospective intelligent atheist from becoming a member.

Then, in the January, 2007 newsletter (it was issued after the February meeting), I read of Jim Young's letter to the Pastor and congregation of the Hopewell Baptist church, in response to their ludicrous sign referring to Free Thinkers.

Unfortunately, Jim Young as well as Ed Golly and the majority of the current board members who voted against my motion (We agree that the minutia of Bible criticism should not be encouraged because it is childish and unprofessional. It is far better to engage philosophically and analytically in principle. Those who do engage in biblical debate should make it clear they speak for themselves and do not represent the official position of Atheists of Florida, Inc.) at the board meeting cannot comprehend that actions such as these degrade atheism and lowers the organization to the stupidity of religion.

I wonder if you can recognize that signs such as "JESUS IS LARD" or similar are equally ludicrous as those of the ones exhibited by the Baptists.

Also, amending the Bylaws at the last minute at the board meeting to re-elect the president for a third term was another travesty.

Consequently, and although I am the founder of Atheists of Florida, I am compelled to disassociate my name from the embarrassing policies the organization has adopted under the apparent domination of Jim Young, unless and until the organization returns to its original purpose and policies.

Letter to the St. Pete Times—Let God pay His own bills!

In her letter of May 27, Eleanor Nicholas states, "To tax churches would certainly cause many to close their doors." That's exactly what ought to occur!

Does Ms. Nicholas suppose that the omnipotent creator and ruler of the universe is unwilling or unable to provide the necessary funds to sustain His houses of worship without taxpayer assistance?

In any case, there is absolutely no justification whatsoever for imposing the burden of supporting anyone's religion upon the taxpayers of the state of Florida.

The Florida Constitution, in Article 1, Section 3, specifically states, "No revenue of the state or any political subdivision or agency thereof shall ever be taken from the public treasury directly or indirectly in aid of any church, sect, or religious denomination or in aid of any sectarian institution."

CNN beginning to smell like Fox News

Following is part of a letter penned to Paula Zahn in response to her January 31st show on 'atheist discrimination'.

Dear Ms. Zahn:

Thank you for the January 31st piece on atheist discrimination in our 'shining city on the hill'. Most of all, thank you for proving beyond ALL reasonable doubt that atheists are indeed a misunderstood and reviled group. American theists are hysterically projecting their own 'sins' onto a group of people (atheists) who are only calling for reason, justice, scientific integrity, and that our Constitution be observed.

The imbalanced perspective segment of your piece (comprised of THREE theists, two of whom were Christians) that followed the actual reporting segment, demonstrated the irrational hostility that atheists must face nearly every day, in numerous contexts here in the 'land of the free'.

I will not dwell on the irony of three theists (all members of protected minorities themselves) implying that atheists 'need to shut up'; nor shall I dwell on their abject denial of an obvious problem.

However, it is impossible to overstate the absurdity of Christians claiming that atheists are the problem, or have no reason to complain. Christians enjoy tax-free control over vast tracts of real estate, media, other forms of wealth; they influence Congress, and have a direct line to the White House. If you would like two historical examples of the inherent danger of intertwining State and Church, look no further than: The Inquisition; and Fascist Italy, Spain, and Germany—all of which were 'Christian Nations'.

Atheist-Friendly Pledge of Allegiance

I robotically mouth the words to a loyalty oath I was forced to memorize during government-sponsored childhood indoctrination out of fear of being ostracized to a multi-colored cloth representing territories acquired through warfare and genocide and to the corporate plutocracy for which it stands.
